President's Message

I hope those of you who attended the Studebaker National Meet had a wonderful meet. Please be ready to report on your experience at our next North Georgia Meeting on June 4th. Helen and I were in Geneva on the Lake, NY, Finger Lakes region, and spring had not yet arrived there.

I am still working (but not too fast) on my 37 valve cover leaks. After removing the valve covers it was obvious that the paint had been burned off of both covers in the area behind the exhaust manifold. The covers were both rusted in the area where the paint had burned off. I am sure that the cover gaskets and any sealant in that area under the gasket will be degraded and leak after the first trip. Does anyone know if the factory supplied any heat shield for that area? If my car had a shield, it was long since gone when I bought the car. I have fashioned an improvised shield for the area from some thin aluminum flashing and will hang it from the intake manifold with bailing wire. If anyone is working on an inline 6 or 8 that has no shield, I recommend a similar action. My shield will probably require some modification to keep it from rattling in the wind when I get frisky and push my speed up to 45 or maybe even 50 mph.

The Woodill Wildfire

The Woodill Wildfire is the car pictured on the cover page of this Hillholder. According to Wikipedia, the Woodill Wildfire was an American sports car built by Dodge and Willys dealer Blanchard Robert "Woody" Woodill from 1952 to 1958 in Downey (near Los Angeles), California. The Wildfire used a Glasspar fiberglass body and is credited with being the first complete fiberglass car available with approximately 15 produced and another 285 sold as kits.

At a Scottsdale auction in 2015, one of these cars sold at no reserve for $17,600. A description of this offering from Scottsdale reads as follows: "Lot #1046 - The Woodill Wildfire was the first fiberglass sports car produced in the early 1950s, even before Corvette. It was on the cover of the August 1953 Motor Trend magazine. This was a special car, dealer driven and loaned out to motion picture studios. Car number 9961 is probably the last one of only seven or eight manufactured by Woody Woodill circa 1953-54; a designer, builder and manufacturer extraordinaire. It has been in ex-Lieutenant Governor Dr. Lonnie Hammargren's Car and Space Museum in Las Vegas for 34 years. This red Wildfire was featured as the main car in the racing movie "Johnny Dark," filmed in 1953 and released in 1954."
